Alpha Delt Acts To Continue Its Leadership Role At Cornell

As most of you know, and with many thanks to brother John S. Dyson '65, Cornell has publicly declared its support of the Greek system and recognized our contribution to the educational mission of the university. Brother Dyson's hand was also evident in the expansion and institutionalization of the office of fraternity and sorority affairs. Finally, there has been a reinvigoration of the Alumni Interfraternity Council and a challenge to all Greek alumni to become more active and involved in their respective houses in order to give back to a system that has helped shape us all.

Alpha Delt has had a strong, active, and involved alumni association for some time, and we have been at the leading edge of much of what has happened to date. As a result, we have constantly been evaluating our position as well as our ability to maintain our strength within a system that is growing around us.

The condition of fraternity housing has nationally been identified as a key factor in sustaining the viability of any one specific chapter and the system as a whole. Studies here at Cornell have indicated that many houses will require a major investment to renovate, upgrade, and modernize them to include the same safety, comfort, and technological advances now available in most dormitories. In fact, during the past decade, many of the strongest fraternities have invested millions of dollars toward such upgrades and improvements.

Over the past few years, we have made many improvements to the house, but mostly they have been for safety, code compliance, and basic operating systems. Relatively few dollars have been spent on improving the house's appearance and structure and none on technological upgrades.

Recognizing the direct relationship between a facility's quality and the strength of the fraternity's membership, an expanding group of alumni has been analyzing Alpha Delt's current situation and how it compares to those of other fraternities that vie for leadership in the Greek system. As an aside, yet no less important, we are also reviewing our alumni corporation structure, developing job descriptions, and creating a corporate objective and mission statement along with transition plans for the smooth changing of our leadership on a more routine basis.

Back to the building... We have initiated an engineering study to determine the short- and long-term needs of the chapter and the investment required for us to maintain our leading position into the foreseeable future. The undergraduates have been involved and will continue recommending upgrades that they feel are important. We are also consulting with the administration and academic community to focus on technological and facility needs. Alumni involvement is being sought at all levels, but specifically regarding renovations that you believe will make the house more attractive and useful to our membership.

We will have the engineering report by summer's end and will share the details with you. As always, your input, comments, and involvement are more than welcome—they are requested. If you wish to learn more about this effort or would like to become personally involved, please contact me at 41 Rainbow Dr., Highland Mills, NY 10930—telephone: 914/928-8109 (home); or 914/735-7166 x212 (business) with voice mail.

An Update On The Facility And Its Needs

Many of you may not have been back to Cornell and the Alpha Delt house in the last year or so. Let me bring you up-to-date on the facility.

This may sound mundane, but the house continues to pass all inspections—fire, safety, and sanitation. Last summer there was a major remodeling of the first-floor (alumni suite or flat, depending on your time at Cornell) bathrooms. The tub has been replaced by a shower. Some of us wish this had been done years ago! The smaller bathroom now has a toilet, and both rooms are handsomely tiled.

For safety reasons the library doors to the porch have been replaced and have interior press-bar fixtures for easy egress. Also, the front door now opens out. You don't need to worry about chimney bricks falling on you or your car. The chimneys have been tuck-pointed. During the winter break the floors were sanded and sealed with four coats of polyurethane, and the hot water

Rush Numbers Go Up At Cornell, Alpha Delt Capitalizes On Trend

As the years pass and the intricacies within the house change, Alpha Delt's rush program continues to prosper. This year's numbers were actually up considerably throughout the university, and the brotherhood capitalized on this trend by composing a most solid pledge class again this year.

The process began in the fall with four fall smokers to allow freshmen to explore the different houses on campus. Although turnouts were low so early in the semester, a handful of prospective rushees were able to take tours of the house and to meet the brothers. Fall rush culminated with the Thanksgiving celebration "Turkey Fest," a delicious turkey dinner prepared by Mario and accompanied by extracurricular activities to keep up everyone's spirits. Thirty prospectives attended the event, and all were impressed with what the house has to offer.

Formal rush began in early January, with the brotherhood turning out in full force. The week involved daily smokers, opening the house for freshmen to meet brothers and to share in food and drink. The nights involved gatherings at local establishments followed by after-hours celebrations in college town. Upperclassmen were especially vital to the process, sharing their thoughts and abilities with the NIBs and coming together in a massive team effort that enabled the house to bring in a class of 14 valued new members of Alpha Delt.

As the national media continues its assault on Greek life, fostering negative stereotypes, rush numbers dwindle. Despite this trend, Alpha Delt continues as the premier house on campus by attracting the most talented, intelligent, and likable pledges year after year.

Our Newest Pledges Prepare For The Challenges Ahead

The pledge class of 1997 is ready to continue the long-standing tradition of Alpha Delta Phi. Our class comprises individuals from diverse backgrounds. We represent eight states and multiple cultural and social backgrounds. Pledges have served in the Finnish military, wrestled in state championships, kayaked in Alaska, headed senior classes, counseled at various summer camps, lived in Hong Kong, and researched marine biology in Costa Rica. Members of the class study neurobiology, economics, industrial and labor relations, mechanical engineering, landscape architecture, biology, and hotel administration. Our differences make a colorful mix, held together by Alpha Delt and our shared experiences this past month.

Our goal is to bring 14 different individuals together into one united pledge class. We understand that by spending time together we can accomplish this. Hence, we have planned several road trips this semester to such chapters as Columbia and Hamilton. Activities such as group dinners and house cleanups serve to bring us together and allow us to get to know more about one another.

Learning about one another is only one of our goals. Our other objectives include learning about the Cornell Chapter of Alpha Delta Phi and our many chapters throughout North America. Through conversations with brothers, we have come to know and appreciate the history and tradition of our fraternity. In addition, our pledge class completed a brothers list, a task that aided us in getting to know the brotherhood.

We look forward to the challenges set forth by the brotherhood and plan on exceeding the expectations of the graduating seniors, who want to leave their house in good hands. In the future, we will continue to do our best to represent the values and ideals of the Alpha Delta Phi.

Alpha Delt And Its Young Leaders Stand Ready For The Future

As my days at Cornell draw to an end, I find myself reflecting on my college career. At the center of my experience lies Alpha Delta Phi. I trust that this is true for many alumni, as well. You will all be pleased to know that Alpha Delt still reigns strong over the Greek system. Our campus reputation is positive, our social program is the envy of many fraternities, the house is in excellent condition, and, most importantly, the bonds of brotherhood are strong.

In January, 14 freshmen were invited to enter the mysteries of the Alpha Delta Phi. The pledge class is the best I have seen in my four years. During their probationary period they have been learning the history of Alpha Delt, as well as learning to treat the house with respect and care. Most importantly, though, they have been developing the "ties that bind" with one another through the numerous group tasks they are expected to accomplish.

The winter alumni corporation meeting, hosted by John S. Dyson '65, was attended by Matt Novak '99, Adrian Cavalieri '99, and me. Among the topics discussed were capital improvements to the house, fund-raising, the elimination of the Hamilton Greek system and consequently our mother chapter, better organizing of the alumni board to serve the needs of the undergraduates, and the compiling of a comprehensive plan to maintain/repair the chapter house and the chapter lodge. Capital improvements to be made include placing lexan covering on the outside of all ground-floor windows to prevent theft and to deter vandalism. Old furniture in the house may also be replaced. Work on the ACEF-sponsored computer-study lounge is also in full swing, with the project to be completed this summer.

The most crucial project on the horizon is the formation of a comprehensive plan to detail the repairs needed by the chapter house and lodge, including the interior systems such as plumbing and electric. Currently a structural engineering firm is coordinating the effort and will present a detailed report at the spring board meeting.

As my time at Alpha Delt draws to a close, I feel confident that the house is ready for the future. The young leadership has shown an earnest interest in the larger issues facing both our house and the fraternity system at Cornell in general. Please come by the house to see firsthand how things are going and to relive the ties that bind in Alpha Delta Phi.

News From The Adelpheic Cornell Educational Fund: Awards And The Computer Room Project

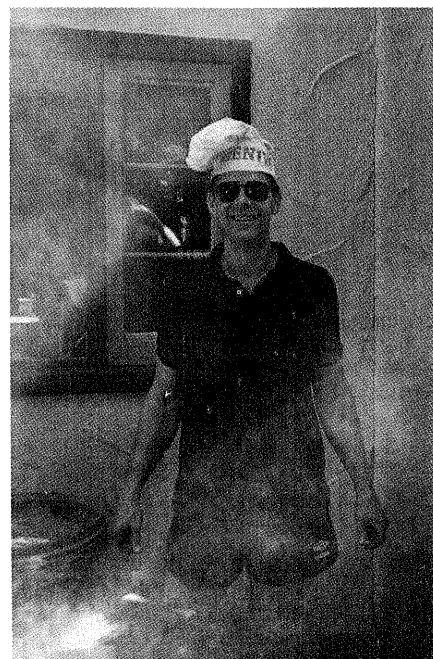

We are pleased to announce the winners of the fall '96 semester ACEF Academic Excellence Awards: Dorian Fougères, Marc Stern, Taber Sweet, and Michael Wolfeld. These brothers have managed to work hard and achieve high grades (dean's list!)—and still be involved, responsible members of the active chapter. As a reminder, each award is $500, and the awards are given out every semester. Congratulations!

Since these awards have been so well received, the ACEF trustees voted on initiation weekend to expand and enhance the program. Historically each spring semester, in addition to the excellence awards, the ACEF has awarded the Lewis, Bruce Hart, and Ted Booth awards. Since these memorial awards have always been very modest in amount, their importance has been somewhat lost. To remedy this situation, the ACEF trustees voted to roll them into the excellence award program, thereby increasing their amount and significance. We look forward to announcing those winners in the next newsletter.

Our on-campus program continues to include modest funding for the Cornell Political Forum, the Knight writing program (with its James Rice '30 Award), and the engineering communications program (with its Thomas Foulkes '52 Award). These efforts, we believe, are promoting good writing and pro-fraternity public relations.

What's the status of the computer room, you ask? Albeit slower than most would like, the "study lounge and computing center" (SLCC) is progressing. During the winter break, while the chapter's new hot water boiler was being installed, the old washing machines and dryers were removed from the space where the SLCC is going to be located. While this doesn't sound like much, the removal also included rerouting, cutting, and capping a number of old supply pipes and drains—as well as building (i.e. all new piping and equipment) a new laundry room in the former "supply closet" behind the kitchen. Some prep work remains (to be completed, we hope, by the beginning of summer), so our next step will be to develop a detailed set of construction drawings so that the project can go out for bid. Again, we thank alumni George Kennedy '52, Randy Bus '68, and Joe Kujawa '91 for their help with this project—as well as John Dyson for the "seed money" to start this major effort.

Our Alumni Report From Far And Near

Although he retired when he was 75, WALKER F. PETERSON JR. '41 reports that he still goes into the office to take care of things that are not part of the day-to-day operation. "I was with Scandia Manufacturing Company for 45 years. Basically, we were a small machine shop specializing in submarine antenna and periscope systems. I was in business in 1948 or '49 for a short time with JIM EASTER '41, but don't see much of him anymore since he lives quite a way out in the country. Also, I see BOB HERRMANN '41, who lives here, and BILL ROBINSON '41 when he comes to visit." Among Walker's fond memories of his four years at Cornell were the picnics at the farm of JAMES E. RICE JR. '30 and the Trumansburg Fair. Send Walker best wishes at 1838 Circle Rd., Baltimore, MD 21204.

"I congratulate the current undergraduates on the December 1996 issue of The Cornell Alpha Delt," writes JACK M. CUDLIP '48 (350 Moross Rd., Grosse Pointe Farms, MI 48236). "It was a well-done, informative bulletin on the house and its members." He adds, "You fellows certainly travel the world. In my day, it was an experience just driving to Ithaca from Grosse Pointe with my roommate, HILARY MICOU '46."

Pens ROBERT J. ENTENMAN '50, "I enjoyed a week's cruise in the British Virgin Islands in January 1997. My shipmates included BILL FERGUSON '52 and his wife." In February, Bob managed to acquire a broken leg and shoulder while skiing. "This meant we had to cancel a Cornell alumni trip to Rome in March." Greet Bob at 82 Church St., Hudson, OH 44236.

About the "yachtsman's cruise" that he took with BOB ENTENMAN '50, WILLIAM H. FERGUSON '51 writes, "This was sponsored by the Cornell Alumni Association and was well done. I only wish more Cornell Alpha Deltas had taken advantage of it." Drop Bill a line at 439 N. 24th St., LaCrosse, WI 54601.

DONALD L. BERG '54 reports a new address of 51301 Eastchurch, Chapel Hill, NC 27514.

"Gail and I had a momentous year in 1996," writes DOUGLAS P. BRAN-

DON '61. Last spring they took a trip to London and Paris and had their first grandchild; then they joined family for the Olympics and moved to a new home (449 Dean St., West Chester, PA 19380). Finally, to top it all off, after more than 31 years at Lukens, Doug retired; however, he continues to keep his hand in the plate steel business through consulting and marketing.

Send greetings to FREDERICK H. PARKIN JR. '63 at 2260 Vallejo St., San Francisco, CA 94123; he retired at the end of 1996 from the restaurant chain he and his partners sold to Pepsico in 1993. Fred and wife Wendy keep in touch with Lynn and THOM CHIRURG '64, Minako and JIM HUNT '64, and Barbara and OTTO DOERING '62.

Reach GERMAIN E. DeSEVE '67 at 2204 Decatur Place NW, Washington, DC 20008.

Writes JAMES A. VAUGHN III '72: "Last year began with an Olympic training regatta in St. Pete, Florida, that the entire family attended (thanks, Pat), and it seemed like the first half of the year (with one very notable exception) was entirely taken up with one Olympic sailing event or another. I helped organize two Hilton Head Olympic Classes sailing events while both Julie and I worked the U.S. trials and the Olympics themselves. After over three years of preparation and training, I got to play at being an Olympic 'official' while Julie actually got to enjoy the events as a race course volunteer. While we will always remember 1996 as the Olympic year, our personal gold medal came on February 25 with the birth of our second son, Neal Hunter. Not to be forgotten, James, now five, has started kindergarten at the Montessori School and loves it. Among other things he has picked up an interest in classical music. There might be hope for the gene pool yet. Since August it has been back to the grindstone playing catch-up. Julie returned to work full-time in October and has taken on management responsibilities at FWA. I and Vaughn Business Systems are just barely staying current with the fast-changing trends in office technology." Jim sends greetings to ED THOMPSON '71. To learn more of their Olympic adventures, write the Vaughns at 21 Deixler Lane, Hilton Head Island, SC 29928.

tank was replaced (just before suffering an impending leak and flood of the furnace room). Some preparation has been made for the remodeling of the computer room, including the move of the laundry equipment to a former closet near the kitchen.

It has become evident that "this old house" will need some major work in the years ahead to maintain its strength, integrity, and beauty. Dende Engineering & Structural Consultants has been hired to perform a general building condition assessment. This assessment will cover architectural, structural, mechanical, electrical, and roofing needs and will be reported in several time frames (0-5 years, 6-10, and 11-plus). This report will be reviewed by our board this spring.

Taking Advantage Of An Opportunity

Balmy breezes. Scantly clothed model-hopefuls. Sound attractive? Such was a reality for Michael W. Bisordi '97 over Christmas break, when he had the opportunity to help pick tomorrow's models for an acclaimed international modeling agency.

Mike and a friend, Greg Gatta, both worked over the break in New York City—Mike for Karen Modeling and Greg for NEXT modeling management. They got the internships through Cornell's professor Ben Daniels, who acts as an adviser for start-up companies.

Mike's contributions to Karen Modeling included helping the company fix computer programming problems. Mike also learned quite a bit about booking models. But perhaps his biggest thrill while working with Karen was meeting supermodel Angie Everhart. "I was so nervous when I met her," Mike recalled, "I shook her hand a bit too hard. I think I really hurt her hand." Always the slickster, Mike.

Mike's adventure, however, did not turn out to be confined to New York City. Joe Hunter, the former co-president of Ford Models and the founder of Karen Modeling, invited Mike down to a model talent search in Hilton Head, South Carolina. Telling the officials that Mike had worked with Karen for five years, Hunter set Mike up with a hotel room on the water, and Mike became a judge of beautiful women from Tokyo, Australia, South Africa, Spain, and the U.S.

"This job was very different for me,"

Mike remarked on his experience. "I've worked for Smith Barney, for Bear Stearns, and for Senator D'Amato. Although those jobs were tough, they were not the same as working at Karen. Working for Karen was interesting in that I got to see an industry typically glamorized by TV and the media." He added, however, that in addition to being surrounded by beautiful women every day, the experience definitely helped his sense of business, as he got to see the inner workings of the modeling industry.

"When you're young, you should try different things if you get the chance," Mike concluded.

Indeed, this was a vacation that perhaps anyone would have thoroughly enjoyed.

A '97 Interns With Company Founded By Alpha Delt Alumnus

Lee Seth Maschler '97 is well on his way to creating a future for himself, having gained valuable experience in the real world. This past summer, Lee's ambition landed him an internship at the Indus Group, located in San Francisco. It was to be his most memorable summer.

Founder and CEO Bob Felton, a graduate from Cornell University's engineering program and an Alpha Delt alum, received Cornell's Entrepreneur of the Year honors three years ago for developing a successful business. The Indus Group specializes in providing management solutions for the process industry. Some of its top clients include PG&E (Pennsylvania Gas and Electric), FP&E (Florida Power and Lighting), and Weyerhaeuser.

Lee admitted that he was slightly nervous before beginning his internship in the accounting and computer departments. His duties at the Indus Group included researching lease agreements and recording "as is" work flows for the accounting department. Upon his arrival in San Francisco, Lee said that he was taken directly from the airport to begin work for Habitat for Humanity.

Aside from the work he did in San Francisco, Lee tried to enjoy California's natural beauty. The water-skiing he did at Donner Lake and the splendor of Big Sur and Hamilton Beach remain some of his most treasured memories. Lee will never forget those sunny San Francisco days, his Fourth of July roadtrip to Los Angeles, the people he met, and, more importantly, the things he learned while working at the Indus Group.

An Alpha Delt Studies Abroad In Italy

Last fall, brother Timothy L. Blanchard '98 spent the semester in Italy. Tim, a fourth-year architect, followed the tradition of spending a semester abroad through Cornell's study abroad program. Many upperclassmen in the school of architecture, art & planning spend a semester studying in Italy as Tim did. Upon his return, I decided to talk to Tim about his experiences in Italy.

According to Tim, the weekdays were spent studying in Rome, where the entire Cornell community was placed in 10 apartments. During the day, Cornell rented out space in a huge mansion, where professors taught the students. For those of you familiar with Rome, Tim lived in an older part of Rome known as Trasevere. Apparently, Trase-vere is similar to the French Quarter of New Orleans: there are lots of fun restaurants and pubs, the streets are fairly narrow, the buildings and homes are old, and it is among the main tourist attractions of Rome.

Every weekend, Tim got on a bus to see a different part of Italy. While in Italy, Tim was able to visit over 30 different cities and towns, such as Pisa, Florence, Bologna, and Naples. All had some sort of architectural significance, from Etruscan burial ruins to the ancient city of Pompeii, which was covered by ash from Mount Vesuvius many years ago.

Aside from the different pubs and restaurants that Tim frequented in Rome and the amazing sights that he saw throughout Italy, he was also able to take part in a wine festival in the small town of Marino. Tim describes the festival as a huge celebration by the entire town in which everyone samples the new wine and has a good time all afternoon. For Tim, this was special because the people of the town included him, a foreigner, in their local tradition. It is not often that one truly gets to sample the local culture of another country. Undoubtedly, this is one of the memories that Tim will have for years to come.
